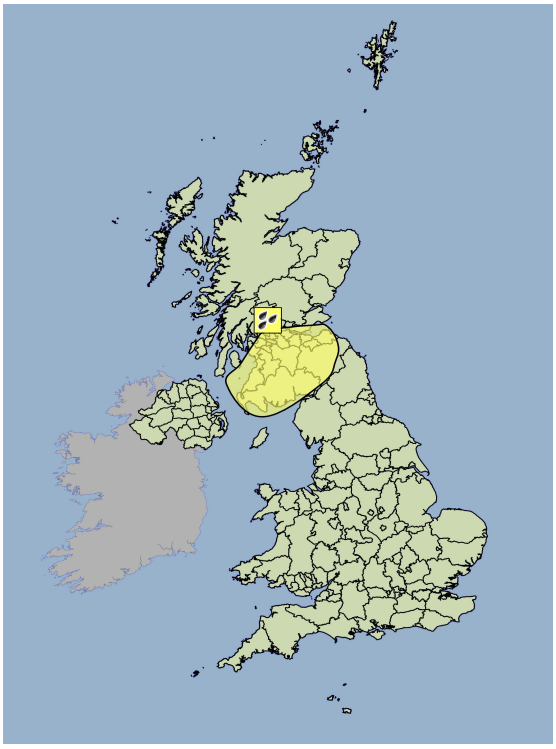
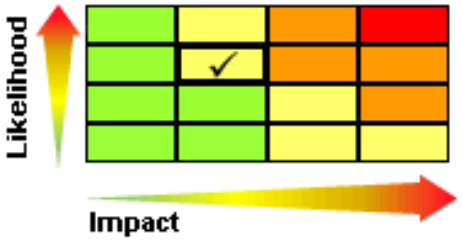
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A frontal system will bring outbreaks of rain into much of southern and central Scotland during Saturday afternoon and evening. Initially this will not be particularly heavy but later in the evening, heavy thundery outbreaks will drift north from England into southeast Scotland. These are then likely to transfer into the Central Belt and the southwest later on Saturday night. Hourly rainfall rates could reach 15 mm locally with overall totals between 20 and 40 mm. Due to the showery nature of the rain, there is some uncertainty where the heaviest falls will occur and some places will escape the worst.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 21:00 on Sat, 22nd Aug 2015 until 07:00 on Sun, 23rd Aug 2015

Outbreaks of rain will turn heavier during Saturday evening, initially across southeast Scotland, before extending westwards across other southern areas overnight, then clearing early on Sunday.

Some localised thundery downpours are possible, leading to possible surface water flooding; the public should be aware of the risk of minor travel disruption on the roads.
